Stonehenge School Makes The News!

Students take over the BBC for a day

Today, students at the Stonehenge School rose up and took the role as reporters for the day! They turned their ordinary learning day into a day full of: Reporting, filming and editing.

Filming began early as a group of three boys created 'The Guide to the Internet' where they warned us of the dangers and how it may affect us negatively in our daily lives.

They covered things such as:

- How viruses can affect your devices
- How making technology your first priority can hurt you in some ways
- How being too active on the internet can ruin chances you can take
- How to be careful on which social media sites you choose to browse on
- Drama ongoing on these sites

These students dedicated their whole day into this report and missed out on education in order to inform people of some of these problems.

To conclude, these students would like to thank the BBC for giving them this chance and are grateful that they got the opportunity in the first place.
